

The Great Kayfabe Improv Comedy

SKETCHBOOK

POWER: Print. Cut. Sabotage reality.

LORE: You are playing a game about playing a game. Try to keep up.

Uncle FrizzleBob

POWER: Destroy this book. Cut the cards. Shuffle them. See what happens.

LORE: No board. No pawns. No manual thicker than your wrist. That was a design decision, not laziness. Probably.

The Intro Ritual

POWER: Name it. Claim it. Power it. Show us what this Power does to reality right now.

LORE: The Intro isn't a character sheet. It's a promise. Say it like you mean it—the story starts the moment you commit.

The Golden Rule of Bizarro

POWER: Perform it. Don't calculate it. Play the contradiction.

LORE: Kayfabe means the fiction is real. Bizarro means the permission to be strange, wrong, and surprising on purpose.

KayfaBIZARRO!

Stay fluffy!

What the FLUFF?!

The Boring Stasis

POWER: Play this to force the current storyteller to describe a completely mundane, ordinary routine for exactly one minute.

The Sudden Tilt

POWER: Play this to drastically change the relationship between two characters. Introduce a massive, unignorable problem.

LORE: A story goes nowhere until the hero gets in trouble. Break the routine. Present a mystery that must be solved.

The Spontaneous Spark

POWER: The active player must point to an object in the room and call it the first bizarre thing that comes to mind, incorporating it into the story instantly.

LORE: Open your mouth and allow anything to come out. Spontaneity is breaking the social conditioning that keeps you nice, safe, and boring.

The Reincorporation

POWER: Play this to bring back an object, phrase, or character from the very first time to instantly resolve the current conflict.

LORE: Make the audience feel like you planned this from the very beginning. You didn't. But you gave yourself the details to steal later.

KayfaBINGO!

KayfaBINGO!

The Brick-Wall Blocker

POWER: Play this to completely reject another player's narrative offer. The story stops dead.

LORE: Defense mechanisms that keep you safe in the real world make you absolutely terrible at games. Blocking kills the journey.

The Smug Canceler

POWER: Set up a brilliant narrative premise, then instantly wrap it in a bow and throw it in the trash before anyone else can interact with it.

LORE: I'm going to light a fire! Oh, wait, the rain came and put it out. Crisis averted, story ruined.

The Waffling Wimp

POWER: Refuse to define what is happening in the scene. Stall the narrative indefinitely out of fear of being judged.

LORE: If you don't make a choice, nobody can tell you you're wrong. Why define the object when you can just play dead?

The Negative Nancy

POWER: Force the narrative to reject a gift or idea, but demand the active player continue the story anyway.

LORE: No, I won't go to Grandma's. It's raining, the woods are dark, and she smells funny. Negative answers kill your partner's ideas.

What the
FLUFF?!

LORE: You aren't building a bridge, you're building a cage.
Unnecessary steps ensure nobody ever has to be emotionally changed.

A cartoon illustration of a brown squirrel with a large, bushy tail running away from a sword. The sword is stuck into a grey rock on the left. The squirrel is on the right, looking back over its shoulder with a surprised expression. The background is filled with colorful splatters in shades of yellow, orange, and blue. A small, grey, star-shaped object is flying through the air to the right of the squirrel.

LORE: Why hunt the Great Moose when we can stop at a diner and gossip for twenty minutes? The audience feels cheated.

A cartoon illustration of a hedgehog with purple and black spines, looking thoughtful. A thought bubble above its head contains the text: "I'll totink about it." The background features soft, watercolor-like clouds in shades of blue, purple, and pink.

LORE: What are you going to say to him? I don't know, I'll think about it. Postponing a good idea to protect your ego.

POWER: Repeat the exact same action from the previous turn without advancing the plot or changing the emotional stakes.
LORE: Picking violets, then roses, then daffodils, then berries... a brilliant strategy to avoid anything actually happening.

KayfaBOGGLE!

The "Original" Ostrich

POWER: Derail the established genre entirely with a desperate, unearned attempt to look incredibly clever and avant-garde.
LORE: Please don't be clever. Be as boring as you possibly can. Trying to be original just derails the world we built together.

The Gossip Goose

POWER: Spend your entire turn talking exclusively about a character or event that is not currently present on the Stage.
LORE: Talking about things that have already happened so you don't have to face the conflict standing right in front of you.

KayfaBOGGLE!

The Cheap Gagger

POWER: Tell a terrible pun or one-liner to instantly escape a high-stakes, emotionally vulnerable scene.
LORE: Oh, what a grave situation! A joke is just a protective mechanism so the improviser doesn't have to experience real change.

The Clingy Joiner

POWER: Agree with the active player so hard, and with such identical emotional response, that further conflict becomes impossible.
LORE: I paint in exactly the same style! We should collaborate! Congratulations, you're playing nicely and the story is dead.

BLÖDSINN!

BLÖDSINN!

What the
FLUFF?!

KayfaBIZARRO!

The High-Status Hound

POWER: You may not move your head while speaking this turn. Force the player next to you to break eye contact first.
LORE: Status has nothing to do with occupation. It is a fluid game of power. I am still, therefore I am in charge.

The Low-Status Shrew

POWER: Fidget, giggle, and touch your face constantly. You automatically lose the current argument, but win the audience's sympathy.
LORE: Toes pointing in. Shoulders hunched. Hands drifting to the face. The epitome of the low-status climb.

The Status Swap

POWER: Instantly reverse the power dynamic of the current Stage. The lowest character becomes the highest, and vice versa.
LORE: We expect the high-status cop to pull over the low-status driver. Reversing it is where the comedy lives.

The Status Transition

POWER: Start your scene as the absolute, undisputed boss. End your scene humiliated in the metaphorical mud.
LORE: Tragedy is the high character falling. Comedy is the low character climbing. All drama is just a status seesaw.

HUMBUG!

HUMBUG!

KayfaBIZARRO!

KayfaBOGGLE!

The Quest Die

POWER: Advance the narrative arc from Akt I (Setup) to the Ordeal, and finally to the Finale.
LORE: A story compass, not a countdown. As it rises, the dramatic weight shifts. You decide when to push hard or let it breathe.

The Story-Mode Die

POWER: Roll to force a strict narrative genre constraint on the current turn. You must commit to the tone.
LORE: The Mode is a frame, not a cage. If it creates a contradiction with your story—that is the story. Play the contradiction.

The Trust Fall

POWER: Accept the most absurd, logic-breaking narrative offer given to you without a single moment of hesitation.
LORE: The number one reason we practice is trust. I know that when I step on stage, they have my back, and I have theirs.

The Willing Audience

POWER: Call KayfaBINGO! on another player's move to validate a perfect, spontaneous narrative beat.
LORE: We can make ourselves laugh all day long, but ultimately, the chaos demands a witness. We need someone to watch the work.

BLÖDSINN!

BLÖDSINN!

What the
FLUFF?!

BLÖDSINN!

Mode 1: Tragic Loss

POWER: The story must suffer a genuine, irreversible loss this turn. No jokes. No escapes.

LORE: Loss is real. Push forward anyway. Let the tragedy breathe.

Mode 2: Comic Fault

POWER: Something goes terribly wrong in the scene, and it is explicitly, undeniably your character's fault.

LORE: Things go wrong. It's your fault. Play the gap between intention and catastrophic execution.

Mode 3: Absurd Normal

POWER: Introduce a completely impossible, physics-breaking element to the scene and refuse to explain it or act surprised.

LORE: The impossible is normal. Don't explain it. Coherence is optional; connection matters more.

Mode 4: Heroic Peak

POWER: Succeed against impossible, ridiculous odds with complete, unironic sincerity.

LORE: Your Character is right for this moment. Play the peak. Commit to the triumph, no matter how stupid the stakes.

BLÖDSINN!

What the FLUFF?!

BLÖDSINN!

INTRODUCING!

Mode 5: Mystical Surface

POWER: Reveal a hidden, cosmic, or supernatural layer operating directly beneath a mundane, boring interaction.
LORE: Something profound is happening beneath the surface. The diner coffee is actually the nectar of the underworld.

The Character Switch

POWER: Voluntarily kill off or eject your current character from the story to immediately draw and play a new one.
LORE: Voluntary drama. A good death scene is a gift to the story. Exit gracefully so someone else can enter.

KAY'S BOGUS!

Mode 6: Forbidden Line

POWER: Cross the exact social or narrative boundary the current scene has been politely tiptoeing around.
LORE: Make the table uncomfortable in a way that serves the story. Cross the line. Sell it.

Tabula Rasa (The Cleansing)

POWER: Upon Quest Collapse, wipe all Scene cards from the Stage. Send everything to the discard pile. Start Akt 1 fresh.
LORE: The Finale doesn't have to be neat. It has to be true to what everyone built. A messy ending earned beats a neat ending imported. Then wipe it.

INTRODUCING!

INTRODUCING!

KayfaBINGO!

KayfaBINGO!

POWER: Yell this out of turn to validate another player's perfect, spontaneous narrative beat.

LORE: That landed. Spontaneous, no explanation needed. Laughter breaks nothing—if you're laughing, you're playing it right.

KayfaBINGO!

KayfaBONGO!

POWER: Yell this when a player uses game mechanics instead of storytelling. Force them to restate it as a narrative event.

LORE: Don't say "I deal 3 damage." Say "Your empire glitches and seven kinds of collapse happen at once." Perform, don't calculate.

KayfaBONGO!

KayfaBOGGLE!

POWER: Pause the game to ask exactly one concrete question about a narrative gap. The active player must answer in 1-2 sentences.

LORE: Not a criticism. A question. Keep it short, keep it about the story, keep it kind. If someone is uncomfortable, boggle it.

KayfaBOGGLE!

Blödsinn!

POWER: Call out a broken rule, ignored mode, or out-of-character action. If the table agrees, the Quest Die freezes this turn.

LORE: A rule was broken. The fiction was breached. Nullify the progress. Call them out to protect the Kayfabé.

KayfaBOGGLE!

BLÖDSINN!

KayfaBINGO!

KayfaBOGGLE!

KayfaBONGO!

BLÖDSINN!

KayfaBIZARRO!

Questions Only?

POWER: For this round, all direct narrative statements are forbidden. Every piece of dialogue and narration must be a question.
LORE: Wer eine Aussage macht, verliert den Zug. The Quest Die drops. Active listening forced through grammatical sabotage.

New Choice!

POWER: Scream "NEW CHOICE!" to force the active player to instantly rewrite and replace their last sentence with something entirely different.
LORE: The original was boring. Do it again, but weirder. Practice taking correction without losing face.

Genre Shift

POWER: Draw a random genre card. The current scene MUST instantly pivot to match the tropes of that genre.

The Blind Line

POWER: Force a player to seamlessly weave a random, pre-written, completely absurd sentence into their monologue.

LORE: The ambassador has already shipped the bananas. Now make it make sense in our medieval fantasy scene. Irgendwie.

LORE: Suddenly... a bureaucratic office thriller! Watch how framing violently alters the exact same story.

SLÖSSANN!

What the FLUFF?!

KayfaBIZARRO!

Best / Worst of Times

POWER: Force the table to play the exact same scene three times: Normal, Flawless Success, and Absolute Catastrophe.

LORE: Drei Leben einer Story. Play the Deus Ex Machina, then play the total collapse. At the end, ask: which version was ehrlicher?

SPACE JUMP (Freeze!)

POWER: Yell FREEZE! Assume the exact physical posture of the active player, and use that pose to start a completely different scene.

LORE: Physical pantomime as the ultimate narrative hijack. The old scene is paused; the new reality overwrites it.

Chain Story

POWER: Narrate a scene using ONLY silent physical gestures. The next player must interpret the pantomime aloud to continue the story.

LORE: Stille Post mit Konsequenzen. The difference between your narrative intent and their spoken impact is the punchline.

The Stage Override

POWER: Overwrite a full Stage slot. Re-frame what was there completely. Yes-and, not yes-but-actually-no.

LORE: Nothing gets erased, just reframed. Sometimes the bulldozer is the only valid literary device.

Stay
fluffy!

KayfaBIZARRO!

OBJECTION! (Yes, But...)

POWER: Force the active player to introduce a narrative contradiction. The Quest Die cannot rise until the contradiction is resolved.

LORE: Not 'Yes, and'—but 'Yes, but actually...'. Dialectical thinking where conflict is the only engine.

Ransom Notes

POWER: Restrict a player's entire vocabulary for the session to 10 specific word tokens. They must pay to borrow words from others.

LORE: Deine Worte, nicht meine. To speak freely, you must pay the Quest Die a tax. Wessen Sprache bestimmt die Realität?

KayfaBIZARRO!

Genre Squares

POWER: Divide the physical table into four zones (Realism, Absurdism, Mythos, Satire). Where you place your card dictates the genre.

LORE: Place it on the border. I dare you to mix Realism and Satire. Context interprets action. Consistency will be socially negotiated.

King Kayfabian

POWER: Seize absolute, dictatorial control over all rules disputes at the table for exactly one turn.

LORE: Final call on any argument. A crown made of fast-food paper. Most tables won't need this. Yours probably will.

KayfaBIZARRO!

BLÖDSINN!

What the
FLUFF?!

KayfaBINGO!

The Great Moose Hunt

POWER: Begin a grand, mythic quest that immediately gets sidetracked by a mundane complaint about a coffee shop.
LORE: We are hunting a myth, but first, let's complain about the weather for twenty minutes. A masterpiece of Sidetracking.

The Stolen Meatballs

POWER: Force two characters into an incredibly awkward first date scenario filled with twitching and terrible questions.
LORE: Can I have your meatballs? Do you drink alcohol? Every day. A one-rhminute masterclass in terrible status play.

The Abdominal Alien

POWER: Escalate a minor medical or personal issue into a full-blown sci-fi horror event in a single sentence.
LORE: Positive forward movement does not mean happy. Raise the stakes so high the audience can't look away.

The Wet Spaghetti Meteor

POWER: End a scene with the most unearned, absurd, gravity-defying Deus Ex Machina possible.
LORE: Because getting hit by a ton of wet pasta is technically a conclusion. A monument to the desperate desire to be original.

KayfaBONGO!

KayfaBINGO!

KayfaBONGO!

[Write Name Here]

POWER: [Write your own cynical sabotage here]
LORE: [Accuse your friends of something specific here]

Stay fluffy!

Mode 7: []

POWER: [Define a new emotional cage for your table]
LORE: [Roll D6 to suffer the consequences]

Stay fluffy!

Stay fluffy!

[Write Rule Here]

POWER: [Break the game intentionally here]
LORE: [Blame Uncle FrizzleBob for the consequences here]

KayfaBIZARRO!

The Final Blessing

POWER: Scan the eyeball to download the apocalypse
(Extensions, Lore, Add-ons).
LORE: Kayfabiaarro truels you. If it's broken, fix it.
If it's missing, add it. Destroy this book. Stay fluffy.

Stay fluffy!