

WINE, WOAD & WARRIOR CHIEFS

History is written by the victors. This deck is drawn by a deranged rabbit.

THE PROPAGANDA PRESS

Because genociding a million badgers sounds better in the third person.

Caesar's Commentarii

POWER: Third-Person Gaslighting.
Play to rewrite an opponent's successful turn as a catastrophic failure. They must accept your version of reality.

LORE: The general wrote a clean, elegant memoir acting like a neutral observer of his own continental slaughter.

Divided into Three Parts

POWER: Geographic Pretext.
Divide the game board.
You automatically own the middle. Opponents must pay rent to exist.

LORE: The most famous opening line in military memoir history is just a fancy way of saying "I'm about to conquer all three."

The One Million Dead

POWER: Institutional Math.
Delete half the opponent's deck.
Call it "Pacification."

LORE: Institutional assessments count corpses as logistics. The Gauls were treated as terrifying so the Romans could justify the math.

Druidic Oral Tradition

POWER: Unwritten Memory.
Hide three cards in your pocket.
The opponent cannot target what they cannot prove exists.

LORE: The specific institutional memory of the Celtic world wasn't written down. When the Romans burned the groves, they deleted the hard drive.

HUMBUG!

The Client, The Catalyst, and The Kingmakers

With friends like these, who needs a Roman occupation?

The Aedui (The Client Tribe)

POWER: Strategic Defection.
Switch alliances mid-game.
Take all your current ally's resources with you.

LORE: Rome's primary client tribe learned the hard way that a Roman alliance has limits military pressure will eagerly expose.

The Helvetii (The Catalyst)

POWER: Demographic Avalanche.
Move 368,000 tokens at once.
Burn your own base so you can't retreat.

LORE: A genuine demographic migration that Caesar intercepted, creating the perfect pretext for a war of total conquest.

The Arverni (The Kingmakers)

POWER: Displaced Pre-eminence.
Gain +5 Attack if you are currently losing. Resentment is your fuel.

LORE: The wealthy plateau tribe whose specific resentment over losing top dog status gave the pan-Gallic revolt its political urgency.

The Aeduan Popular Faction

POWER: Grassroots Sabotage.
Disable the opponent's highest-value aristocratic card using sheer mob noise.

LORE: The aristocrats loved the Roman patronage; the people knew it was just an elaborate leash.

THE FRINGES OF THE FRINGES

Too far from the Mediterranean to care about your stupid statues.

THE BELGAE

POWER: Barbarian Distance. Immune to 'Civilizing' effects. The further from the center you play them, the harder they hit.

LORE: Caesar called them the bravest because they were furthest from Mediterranean luxury and fought the Germans for fun.

THE NERVII

POWER: Camp Ambush. Attack while the opponent is still shuffling their deck.

LORE: They used terrain and timing to hit the Romans before formations could be completed, nearly ending Caesar's career in an afternoon.

AMBIORIX OF THE EBURONES

POWER: Fatal Trust. Convince an opponent to discard their hand to "avoid a trap," which is the actual trap.

LORE: The chieftain who used a client's trust to bait fifteen Roman cohorts out of winter camp and straight into the meat grinder.

THE GALATIANS

POWER: Mercenary Range. Play this card on any opponent's board. They fight for whoever pays the most attention.

LORE: The Gauls who went East. They had no druids, no base, just a reputation for ferocity that terrified Hellenistic kings into hiring them.

Kings, Warlords, and the One Who Almost Won

Heroism is just a calculation of how much you're willing to lose.

Vercingetorix of the Arverni

POWER: Tragic Sacrifice. Surrender this card to save your remaining deck. The opponent gets to goat for 6 turns.

LORE: He built a genuinely pan-Gallic coalition, figured out the correct strategy, and lost because marginally better is enough for Rome.

Brennus

POWER: Heavy Sword. When tying a score, throw your sword on the scales. You win.

LORE: The Senonian chieftain who sacked Rome and summarized all asymmetric negotiation with five syllables: Vae Victis.

Stay fluffy!

Dumnorix of the Aedui

POWER: Refusal to Cross. Cancel any forced movement effect. You die, but you don't go.

LORE: The politician who understood Caesar was a permanent replacement, not a guest, and was killed trying to escape the hostage tour.

Stay fluffy!

Cassivellaunus

POWER: Mobile Skirmish. Never lock into combat. Deal damage and return this card to your hand immediately.

LORE: The British chieftain who refused to give the Romans the heavy infantry fight they wanted, opting to ruin their day with chariots.

DRUIDS, DIPLOMATS & SEVERED HEADS

Because someone has to bless the swords and pickle the skulls.

Druid Military Function

POWER: Divine Exemption.
This card cannot be attacked. It directs all your other cards and makes the violence "legitimate."

LORE: They weren't just religious specialists; they were the command layer, the legal arbitrators, and the institutional memory.

Diviciacus of the Aedui

POWER: Theological Legitimation.
Force an opponent to agree with your move because "the gods (or the Senate) said so."

LORE: The only Druid Caesar named. His cooperation was structurally necessary for the Roman client system to function in Gaul.

cut here

cut here

The Head Cult

POWER: Cedar Oil Trophy.
When you defeat an enemy card, pin it to your board. It generates fear points every turn.

LORE: You don't sell your professional credentials. The head contains the soul; taking it transfers the enemy's power to the victor.

The Sacred Spring (Carnutes)

POWER: Subterranean Memory.
Long after your cards are destroyed, they still produce +1 Resource from the discard pile.

LORE: The pan-Gallic druidic council met here. Rome burned it and built a cathedral on top. But the spring remembers.

KayfaBOGGLE!

GW

Georg v. Westphalen

Naked Screaming & Auditory Trauma

Battle is psychological before it is physical.

Naked Warrior (Gaesatae)

POWER: Survival Mathematics. Attack with zero defense. Your opponent takes psychological damage just watching you do it.

LORE: They fought without armor as a deliberate ritual choice, communicating that normal survival mathematics did not apply to them.

The Carnyx

POWER: Acoustic Terror. Opponent must play their next turn with their cards facing away from them.

LORE: The tall bronze trumpet with the animal head. Its harsh, discordant shriek was the specific signal that activated the Roman fear response.

The Torque

POWER: Honor Advertising. Place on a unit. If defeated, the opponent gets double points. If victorious, you get triple.

LORE: The twisted gold neck ring. Armor for the soul, a library of accumulated honor, and the ultimate trophy for a Roman looter.

The Chariot

POWER: Aristocratic Extraction. Save one of your defeated cards right before it dies by pulling it back to your hand.

LORE: Not an archery platform. A mobility tool for the elite warrior who fights on foot but needs the prestige of a drive-by arrival.

BLÖDSINN!

WAR IS HELL (AND FUNNY)

STOLEN
COPY

PROPERTY OF THE UNDERGROUND.

GW

Georg v. Westphalen

IRON, WOOD, AND PERSONAL COMBAT

Tools of the trade for people who fight as individuals, not architecture.

Celtic Longsword

POWER: Open Melee. Devastating in open space, but loses power if the opponent clusters their cards together.

LORE: 90 centimeters of metallurgical superiority designed for slashing. Romans claimed they bent; archaeologists claim Romans lied.

The Gaesum (Heavy Spear)

POWER: Socketed Impact. Pierce through an opponent's shield card and hit the unit behind it.

LORE: The heavy thrusting weapon that gave the naked Gaesatae their name. Big, iron, leaf-shaped, and terrifying.

KayfaBONGO!

The Lancea (Light Spear)

POWER: Farmer's Reach. Can be equipped by any low-level card to instantly make them a ranged threat.

LORE: Everyone's weapon. The specific equipment the farming warrior carries from his fields to the battlefield and back.

Celtic Shield (Thureos)

POWER: Individual Block. Block an attack, but you cannot form a shield wall with other cards.

LORE: A personal tool for individual combat, unlike the Roman Scutum. It reflects an honor-based system, not a collective-discipline machine.

'clink'

PROPERTY OF THE UNDERGROUND

"THE THINGS ROME STOLE"

Invented by Gauls, worn by Romans, credited to Knights.

CHAINMAIL (LORICA HAMATA)

POWER: Technological Adoption.
When an opponent uses a new tactic, copy it immediately and claim you invented it.

LORE: The Gauls invented it. The Romans wore it. Medieval knights get the credit. Historiography is just organized theft.

cut here

CELTIC IRON HELMET

POWER: Ceremonial Distraction.
Equip to draw all enemy attacks to this unit, because it looks absolutely fabulous.

LORE: From simple caps to spectacular winged parade helmets. The metallurgical sophistication was so high, Roman auxiliary units just wore the local gear.

cut here

SCORCHED EARTH

POWER: Resource Denial.
Burn your own resource deck. The opponent immediately starves and loses half their hand.

LORE: Vercingetorix's doctrine: destroy your own grain to break the Roman supply line. The hardest part was convincing the tribes to do it.

cut here

THE HELVETIAN WAGON LAAGER

POWER: Mobile Fortress.
Turn your discard pile into a defensive wall. It takes three turns to breach.

LORE: The moving city of the Helvetii turned into an impromptu fortress at Bibracte, proving that migrating badgers do not go down easily.

PROPERTY OF THE UNDERGROUND

...RELIEVE DEFTWOTE FOR
BOAR BLUEPRINTS
FOR A DEVICE."

HUMBUG!

NOTY
WHAT ALIEN

STOLEN
ADY

GW Georg v. Westphalen

CYNICAL
WOODLAND CREATURES

TRAUMA & VENGEANCE

The specific trauma that shaped three centuries of Roman foreign policy.

BATTLE OF THE ALLIA

POWER: Exposed Flank. Attack the card on the far edge of the opponent's board for double damage.

LORE: The Gauls wrapped around the unsecured Roman flank. The Roman army collapsed. The strategic psychology of a whole empire was born in this panic.

KayfaBIZARRO!

VAE VICTIS (THE RANSOM GOLD)

POWER: Absolute Leverage. Change the win conditions of the game while you are currently winning.

LORE: Woe to the conquered. Brennus's response when the Romans complained about the scales. The permanent truth of every asymmetric negotiation.

SACK OF ROME (390 BCE)

POWER: Capitol Siege. Occupy an opponent's territory. They must pay you gold every turn until you leave.

LORE: They weren't screaming barbarians stumbling into an empty city. They conducted a seven-month siege and extracted maximum leverage.

BATTLE OF TELAMON

POWER: Pincer Movement. Trap an opponent's card between two of your own to instantly destroy it.

LORE: The Romans caught a Gallic army between two consular armies. The last tactical expression of the naked warrior charge in Italy.

THE GRINDER AT WORK

Where institutional resilience beats tactical brilliance.

BATTLE OF BIBRACTE

POWER: Narrative Management. Even if you lose the battle, you get to write the score sheet.

LORE: The Helvetii nearly broke the legions. Caesar claimed victory, ordered them home, and wrote the first chapter of his PR masterpiece.

CAESAR'S HOSTAGE DIPLOMACY

POWER: Political Extortion. Steal an opponent's card. If they attack you, you rip it up.

LORE: Caesar attempted to take Dumnorix to Britain as a hostage. Standard Roman operating procedure: hold their kids, take their land.

THE TENTH LEGION

POWER: Flank Rescue. Play instantly when you are about to lose. Save your board and wipe out the attacker.

LORE: The Roman reserve that hit the Nervii from the flank just as Caesar was grabbing a shield and fighting for his life in the front lines.

AVARICUM (THE EXCEPTION)

POWER: Fatal Sentimentality. Refuse to destroy one of your own resource cards. The opponent captures it and wins the game.

LORE: The one town the Gallic council refused to burn. Caesar took it, used its grain, and continued the campaign. Sentimentality is a tactical error.

The Masterpiece That Almost Worked

When marginally better is sufficient, and the stakes are absolute.

THE CIRCUMVALLATION

POWER: Double Walls. Build a wall facing your opponent, and a wall facing the rest of the room. You can't move, but neither can they.
LORE: Fifty kilometers of earthworks. Fighting on two fronts simultaneously. The most terrifying engineering flex in military history.

THE DESPERATE FLANK ATTACK

POWER: Absolute Commitment. Exhaust your entire hand to add +1 to a crucial roll.
LORE: Caesar personally rode along the line with cavalry to stabilize the collapsing perimeter. The final engagement lasted a day and a night.

THE RELIEF ARMY

POWER: Mass Coordination. Combine the attack power of every single card in your deck for one turn. If it fails, you lose instantly.
LORE: 250,000 warriors from across Gaul, assembled to break the Roman perimeter. They failed by the margin of one flank attack.

THE SIX-YEAR WAIT

POWER: Cruel Display. Keep a defeated leader on your board for six turns before discarding it, just to demoralize the opponent.
LORE: Caesar kept Vercingetorix in a cell for six years just to parade him in his triumph. The ultimate political communication.

TECH SUPPORT FOR THE EMPIRE

They erased the people but kept the patents.

THE BARREL

POWER: Logistics Hack. Store unused resources indefinitely. Rome didn't invent this, you did.

LORE: Gallic barrel logistics moved the Roman army. The technology survived; the culture that produced it was reclassified as "barbarians."

ROTARY FLOUR MILL

POWER: Endless Sustenance. Generate +1 food token every turn forever.

LORE: The Gallic invention that fed Europe for a thousand years. Caesar destroyed the druids, but he kept the bread-makers.

cut here

cut here

cut here

BLÖDSINN!

THEY CALLED IT 'INNOVATION'.

SEAMLESS IRON WHEEL RIM

POWER: Frictionless Advance. Move your cards twice as fast across the board.

LORE: The Celtic metallurgical mastery that allowed chariots and wagons to conquer rough terrain. Rome rode on Gallic rims.

EBURONES ANNIHILATION

POWER: The Erasure. Remove a faction from the rulebook entirely.

LORE: Caesar's response to Ambiorix's trap: the systematic, complete destruction of a tribe, written down with bureaucratic indifference.

GW

Georg v. Westphalen

Epistemic Sabotage

KayfaBIZARRO! Disrupt the narrative!

Uncle FrizzleBob's Red Pen

typeset. Latim arritus that the sentence that the conquest is w in the conqueror

POWER: Rule Vandalism. Cross out any printed rule on an opponent's card and write your own.
LORE: FrizzleBob notes that the sentence that begins the conquest is written in the language of the conqueror. Time to edit.

Analog-First DIY Logic

POWER: Cut & Paste. Physically cut one of your cards in half to double its number of units, halving its health.
LORE: The Roman system was a rigid machine. The FrizzleBob system is a pair of scissors and zero respect for institutional boundaries.

The Margin Infestation

POWER: Gutter Attack. Your margin doodles come alive and eat the opponent's resource tokens.
LORE: If it looks designed or corporate, damage it. The truth lives in the messy, chaotic, unhinged margins.

The Spring Remembers

POWER: Permanent Haunting. You win the moral victory. The game ends in a draw, but the opponent feels bad about it.
LORE: The druids are gone. The cathedral was built. But the water still flows beneath it. Vae victis.

KayfaBIZARRO!
Now cut these up and PLAY!

KayfaBIZARRO!
Now cut these up and PLAY!