What the FLUFF?!

NOBODY AGREED TO THIS EITHER

Four mechanisms for making reality load-bearing before anyone notices.

THE VERSION

POWER: Replaces the event with an account of the event — and nobody notices the swap.

LORE: Two players described the same card. Neither was wrong. Neither was right. The story moved on.

RETCON

POWER: Rewrites the past from the present — silently, without announcement.

LORE: A character who died three turns ago was never actually there. Everyone adjusted. Nobody was asked to.

MEMORY DRIFT

POWER: Reconstructs the past continuously — each retrieval slightly different from the last.

LORE: A player insisted the Quest Die was at 4. It was at 2. The session quietly accepted the new number.

WHAT HAPPENED?

POWER: Dissolves shared reality the moment a scene ends — leaving only competing accounts.

LORE: Everyone was in the room. No two accounts matched. The Quest Die didn't care.

*KayfaBOGGLE!

THE OBSERVATION WAS ALREADY PART OF THE EVENT

Three forces and one witness that change what gets performed.

BLÖDSINN!

$$E=mc^2 \quad \frac{E}{d^2} = \frac{1}{m_e} \quad \frac{1}{2x} \int e^x dx = f(x) dx$$
$$v_n = \frac{1}{2} r dx \quad fV = \frac{1}{8} \int_0^m \frac{f(n) \cdot (-n)}{dx}$$
$$V = f(x) dx + c + j d = \frac{2}{9}$$
$$\frac{Ac}{dx} \cdot \frac{1}{\pi} \int_0^1 f' dx = (e^x + 1) dx$$
$$\frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{(p+q+u)^2} = \int e^{x^2} dx = 0$$
$$z + \frac{1}{2} r^{2k} dx = 0$$
$$L = L = \frac{8 - 1^2}{1 + x^2}$$

POWER: Interrupts any coherent explanation — no evidence required, no rebuttal possible.

LORE: A diagnosis was about to land. Someone said "Blödsinn." The room adjusted. Nobody could prove them wrong.

FRAME CONTROL

POWER: Whoever names the problem owns the conversation before it begins.

LORE: A conflict was redefined as a misunderstanding. The conflict vanished. Nobody was sure how.

CONSENSUS

POWER: Locks in a shared version of events without anyone having to agree to it.

LORE: The group played the same game for twenty minutes. Nobody explained the rules. Everyone followed them anyway.

BLÖDSINN!

KayfaBIZARRO!

THE WITNESS

POWER: Presence without participation changes what is performed — permanently.

LORE: Someone observed the story without playing for three rounds. When they finally spoke, the table went quiet.

The Rule Nobody Mentioned

How groups enforce what was never stated.

THE OUTLIER

POWER: Forces the group to route around dissent — making the story more interesting and more expensive.

LORE: One player refused the consensus. The story had to find another way. It took longer. It was better.

INVISIBLE AGREEMENT

POWER: Enforces rules that were never stated — and punishes those who didn't know to follow them.

LORE: Someone tried to break an unspoken rule. The group enforced it — without being able to explain what it was.

STATUS LEAK

POWER: Communicates hierarchy even when suppressed — especially when suppressed.

LORE: A player downplayed their card. The group took it more seriously than any Power openly declared.

POLITE FICTION

POWER: Maintains group function by agreement never to examine what everyone has noticed.

LORE: A plot hole had been obvious for three turns. Someone finally named it. The table laughed — nervously — and moved on.

THE DECISION WAS MADE BEFORE YOU ARRIVED

How authority moves before the meeting starts.

THE AUDIENCE

POWER: Observation changes performance - and performance changes decision.

LORE: Someone joined the session mid-game. The story immediately became more coherent. And less honest.

THE ATTENDING

POWER: Extracts compliance through the performance of already knowing - questions are theater.

LORE: Someone in the room clearly knew more than they said. Nobody asked why. The decision was made anyway.

SIDE CONVERSATION

POWER: Moves the real decision before the visible one - leaving the table to ratify what's already done.

LORE: Two players had been signaling each other for several turns. The tables noticed at the Finale. Too late.

GOOD NEIGHBOR

POWER: Stabilizes groups by protecting each other's version - at the cost of accuracy.

LORE: Two incompatible explanations were now both maintained. The group continued as if this was fine. It was.

THE STORY YOU DIDN'T KNOW YOU WERE IN

The hidden architecture of every collaborative scene.

THE QUEST

POWER: Manufactures urgency by insisting a problem exists – and the insistence is the problem.

LORE: The group agreed on a goal. Nobody agreed why. The Quest Die moved anyway.

THE STAGE

POWER: Sets the first argument before anyone speaks – context is not neutral.

LORE: The same scene played in a hospital read differently than in a courtroom. The cards were identical.

YES, AND

POWER: Accelerates reality by treating every impossible addition as already true.

LORE: Someone introduced a dragon. Nobody asked why. The story became about something else entirely.

ESCALATION

POWER: Raises stakes by confirming the previous ones were real – each layer requires the one beneath it.

LORE: Someone played a Heroic turn after three Tragic ones. The table knew what it cost. It landed.

HOW IT ENDS (AND BEGINS AGAIN)

The four moves that close a scene and open the next one.

CHARACTER SWITCH

POWER: Changes identity mid-scene — and the story absorbs the new one faster than anyone admits.

LORE: A player swapped cards without warning. The story accommodated the new character more easily than expected.

NO, BUT

POWER: Refuses without exiting — turns refusal into a scene, not an escape.

LORE: A player said no. The Quest Die didn't move. The scene went deeper than any yes had gone.

What the FLUFF?!

RESET

POWER: Returns to before the current tension — and carries the tension forward as subtext.

LORE: A scene collapsed. The group backed up two turns. The collapse was still there. Everyone felt it.

THE FINALE

POWER: Declares the ending — and makes everything before it retroactively mean what the ending needs.

LORE: The Quest Die hit 6. The player paused. What they said made the previous hour cohere. It wasn't planned.

THE SCENE THAT WOULDN'T END

Four ways a story loses its energy and keeps going anyway. Wm

TRYHARD ENERGY

POWER: Makes viable effort that should be invisible – and the effort is all anyone sees.

LORE: A player performed their card so hard the card disappeared. What remained was the performance. Nothing landed.

JOKE WITHOUT STAKE

POWER: Deploys humor with no cost – and removes the table's ability to take anything seriously afterward.

LORE: The table laughed. Nobody remembered why. The Quest Die hadn't moved in two rounds.

KayfaBIZARRO!

DEAD SCENE

POWER: Extends a moment past its function – draining the energy of everything that follows it.

LORE: Everyone was waiting for someone else to move the story. The Quest Die stayed at 3 for four turns.

FORCED ENDING

POWER: Imports a conclusion that wasn't earned – and the table knows it, immediately, without discussion.

LORE: The Quest Die was at 6. Nobody was ready. The Finale landed like a door closing before the room was finished.

BOTH THINGS ARE TRUE

The moves that work only when you stop trying to resolve them.

KayfaBINGO!

AMBIVALENCE

POWER: Refuses resolution — and forces every other player to carry the unresolved weight.
LORE: A character was asked which side they were on. They said: "Yes." The scene continued without clarification.

PARADOX ENGINE

POWER: Holds contradictions in play simultaneously — performs both rather than resolving either.
LORE: A card said one thing. The player's previous card said the opposite. Neither was retconned. The Quest Die moved.

DOUBLE BIND

POWER: Constructs a situation where every available move is costly — and the construction is the trap.
LORE: Move the Quest forward and lose the Stage. Hold the Stage and freeze the Quest. The player chose. It cost.

SIGNAL vs NOISE

POWER: Buries the important thing in the ordinary — it only becomes visible when it's already decided.
LORE: A card played three turns ago as a throwaway became the pivot of the Finale. Nobody had tra

THE STORY THAT LEFT THE TABLE: Four mechanisms that make fiction produce real effects.

MEANING AS PERFORMANCE

POWER: Settles interpretation through action rather than argument — the performed version wins.
LORE: Two players disagreed on what a card meant. One performed their interpretation. That one survived.

TRUST LOOP

POWER: Requires another player to catch what you've thrown — and the story functions only if they do.
LORE: A player set up an obvious opening. The next player took it. The table exhaled. Everyone had been waiting.

Stay fluffy!

FICTION THAT WORKS

POWER: Produces real effects outside itself — at which point it is no longer accurately described as fiction.
LORE: A player described a character's choice. Someone at the table made a different decision for themselves. Quietly. In the same moment.

THE GAP

POWER: Leaves critical content unsaid — and the table fills it with what they needed it to be.
LORE: A character ended their scene without resolving the tension. The next player continued as if it was resolved. It wasn't.

LORE: A player draws King Kayfabian and suddenly every previous card makes structural sense. The game was always this game.

THE SYSTEM

LORE: THE SYSTEM made a decision. Nobody could object. The decision was correct by the rules that produced it.

BEEP BOOP!

LORE: The Patient entered the story. Three cards that had seemed theoretical immediately had consequences.

THE INTERN

A cartoon illustration depicting a workplace scenario. On the left, a white rabbit wearing a blue short-sleeved shirt is holding up a large document labeled 'PAGE 1' with its right hand and a smaller red folder with its left. The rabbit has a wide-eyed, excited expression. On the right, a badger wearing a brown suit, white shirt, and brown tie is looking at the rabbit with a stressed and overwhelmed expression. He is sweating profusely, with large sweat droplets on his face, and has a large red question mark above his head. The background shows an office environment with stacks of papers, a desk with a coffee cup, and a bulletin board with various papers pinned to it.

LORE: The Intern drew a card, read it literally, did exactly what it said. It worked. Nobody could explain why.

THE GAME OUTSIDE THE GAME

Four moves that move the story beyond the table.

THIS IS ENOUGH

POWER: Declares sufficiency – and makes the declaration retroactively true for everything that preceded it.

LORE: The session ended before the story did. Three players continued the story elsewhere. It finished differently.

PLAY AGAIN

POWER: Uses the first session to change what the second session can mean – repetition is not repetition.

LORE: The group reshuffled. Three cards landed in the same sequence. The story went somewhere entirely new.

YOU MISSED SOMETHING

POWER: Withholds partial access – and partial access creates more engagement than total access ever could.

LORE: A player said there was a card the table hadn't drawn yet that explained everything. Nobody asked what it said. They wanted to find it.

THE QR

POWER: Moves attention outside the current system while keeping it in a related one.

LORE: Someone scanned mid-session. The game followed them home. They played it three days later with different people.

TAKE IT WITH YOU

The last four moves — and the only one you need.

START HERE

POWER: Makes every entry point valid — the story that follows is shaped by which door was used.

LORE: Someone new asked where to start. Another player handed them one card. "This one." The session built from there.

THE HUB

POWER: Connects isolated instances into a network — and the network is only as real as the edges that use it.

LORE: Someone asked where to find more. The card was already pointing there. They hadn't noticed until now.

CUT HERE

TAKE THIS WITH YOU

POWER: Produces an artifact that outlasts the session — the game continues in whatever the player carries away.

LORE: The session ended. A player photographed their hand. They didn't explain why. A week later they sent it to someone.

CUT HERE

DON'T EXPLAIN THIS

POWER: Bypasses explanation and reaches the person who already understands — the card self-selects its audience.

LORE: A stranger picked up a card. Read it. Asked one question. Not about the rules. About the thing the card described.

The Game Is Running

The system runs without the observer. The observer who knows they change the system changes it differently than the observer who doesn't know. Stay fluffy.
