

BEYOND the BANALITIES of GOOD vs EVIL

Uncle FrizzleBob's KAYFABIZARRO Komik Kards for Monster Morality Wrestling & Flexible Kayfabizarro Ethiks

THE CONTENDERS: Main Event Mascots

Choose your mask. Extract your cheers.

Anti-hero

POWER: Steal audience sympathy while doing the exact same job as the villain.

LORE: You're just a Complete Monster with a better PR team and a highly marketable tragic backstory.

OVERPRICED
FOAM FINGERS

Complete Monster

POWER: Absorb all audience hatred to instantly shield the writers from having to write nuance.

LORE: A narrative shortcut for lazy authors who need you to stop thinking and start blindly booing.

BLÖDSINN!

Goody Two-Shoes

POWER: Annoy the entire roster into compliance through weaponized purity.

LORE: Adherence to the rules so absolute it becomes a form of psychological warfare against the audience.

Knight Templar

POWER: Justify extreme, horrific violence by pointing at your shiny 'Good Guy' badge.

LORE: You think you're the hero, but your extremist methods are just villainy with a righteous paint job.

THE CONTENDERS: Delusions of Grandeur

Heroes by technicality, villains by bureaucracy.

Cowardly Lion

POWER: Extract maximum audience tension by refusing to do your job until the last possible second.

LORE: You're scared to death, but the script demands you accidentally do the right thing eventually.

Nominal Hero

POWER: Hijack the narrative's moral high ground while maintaining entirely selfish motivations.

LORE: You are considered a hero not because it's right, but because it aligns with your personal grift.

Tautological Templar

POWER: Immune to moral criticism. Reality warps to justify your actions.

LORE: "I am on the right side, therefore anything I do to you is mathematically incapable of being wrong."

The Sociopath

POWER: Bypass all Moral Dilemma cards. Empathy is a mechanic for weaker players.

LORE: Incapable of feeling compassion, leaving you completely unburdened by the pesky rules of the kayfabe.

THE CONTENDERS: Conceptual Heavyweights

They aren't wrestling; they're just aggressively existing.

Purity Personified

POWER: Instantly trigger the "Protect the Mascot" objective for all nearby players.

LORE: You have absolutely no traces of evil in you, making you an incredibly boring liability to the team.

OVERPRICED
FOAM FINGERS

Anti-Villain

POWER: Confuse the audience into rooting against the actual heroes.

LORE: You're a villain who forgot to pack traditional evil qualities, relying entirely on aesthetic brooding.

BLÖDSINN!

The Conscience

POWER: Paralyze your tag-team partner with weaponized guilt.

LORE: The designated character whose sole job is to act as an un-ignorable, highly annoying moral guideline.

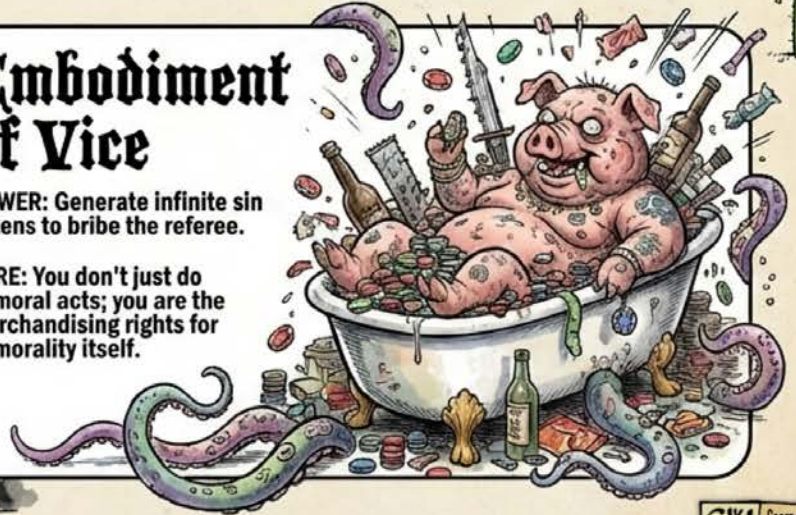

KayfaBONGO!

Embodiment of Vice

POWER: Generate infinite sin tokens to bribe the referee.

LORE: You don't just do immoral acts; you are the merchandising rights for immorality itself.

GW

Georg v. Westphalen

HEEL & FACE TURNS: The Wardrobe Malfunction

Changing sides is just changing masks.

Faith-heel Turn

POWER: Convert all your collected "Prayers" into "Spite" tokens.

LORE: Losing your belief in the universe's booking committee instantly transforms you into a top-tier villain.

Befriending the Enemy

POWER: Disarm an opponent by forcing a mandatory hug sequence.

LORE: The naive belief that a systemic apex predator wouldn't be so evil if they just had a buddy.

Category Traitor

POWER: Bypass faction-specific traps by pretending you belong there.

LORE: You betray your own people by refusing to stick to the demographic the marketing team assigned you.

2/10

The Atoner

POWER: Farm unlimited pity from the audience for crimes you already enjoyed committing.

LORE: A character seeking to make up for bad deeds, mostly because the consequences finally caught up.

SCRIPTED!

SCRIPTED!

HEEL & FACE TURNS: Sinking into the Mud

You stare into the ring, the ring body-slams you.

Redeeming Replacement

POWER: Inherit the stats of a dead villain without the moral baggage.

LORE: Taking an identity previously used for evil and slapping a fresh coat of "Good" PR on it.

He Who Fights Monsters

POWER: Gain villain abilities, but lose your hero insurance.

LORE: You fought the evil so hard, you accidentally memorized their playbook and started using it.

Moral Event Horizon

POWER: Permanently lock your alignment to "Unforgivable."

LORE: You've done too much wrong to ever be forgiven. Welcome to the permanent Heel roster.

False Friend

POWER: Deal double damage during a cooperative tag-team maneuver.

LORE: They claim to be your tag partner, but they are just waiting for the referee to look away.

KayfaBONGO!

HEEL & FACE TURNS: Inescapable Tropes

You can't outrun the writers' room.

Chronic Villainy

POWER: Automatically fail any redemption arc to retain your cool aesthetic.

LORE: You can never be free of being evil. The universe literally bends to make your hobbies malicious.

Chronic Hero Syndrome

POWER: Intercept all incoming damage directed at NPCs, whether you want to or not.

LORE: You can never abandon somebody in need, making you the easiest mark in the arena.

Neutral No Longer

POWER: Gain a massive surprise attack bonus against both factions.

LORE: You finally choose a side after realizing the audience was falling asleep.

Sheep in Sheep's Clothing

POWER: Immune to all 'Reveal Traitor' mechanics.

LORE: Everyone suspects you of being a mastermind, but the horrifying truth is you are exactly as boring as you seem.

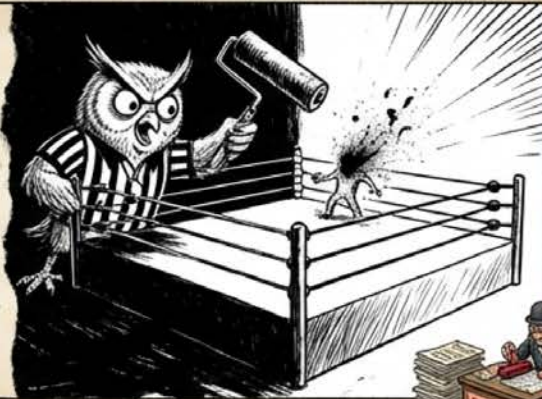

RIGGING THE RING: Systemic Illusions

The mat is uneven. The ropes are barbed. The ref is blind.

Black-and-White Insanity

POWER: Force all gray-area characters to pick a side or take fatal damage.

LORE: An extremely binary moral worldview where anyone alightly disagreeing with you is one-dimensionally evil.

KayfaBIZARRO!

NO NUANCE

Blue-and-Orange Morality

POWER: Your actions become completely immune to standard logic checks.

LORE: Morality that's so bizarre, unconventional, and distorted that the referee's brain melts trying to score it.

WRITERS ROOM CHAOS

NO NUANCE

Balance Between Good and Evil

POWER: Automatically resurrect the villain if the hero wins too decisively.

LORE: Good and evil must exist in balance, which gives the worst villains endless loopholes to make a grand return.

KayfaBIZARRO!

WRITERS ROOM

Good Needs Evil

POWER: Generate profit by keeping the central conflict completely unresolved.

LORE: Without a heel to fight, the hero loses their merchandising deal. Evil is just job security.

PROFIT OVER PLOT

GW Georg v. Westphalen

PROFIT OVER PLOT

RIGGING THE RING: Institutional Sabotage

Whoever owns the arena, makes the rules.

Evil Running Good

POWER: Extract resources from heroic players who think they are saving the world.

LORE: Heroic groups are secretly being managed by the exact villains they are trying to punch.

The Omniscient (God is Evil)

POWER: Rewrite one rule on the board mid-game purely out of spite.

LORE: The traditionally good, all-knowing force actually hates you and is booking this match for laughs.

Grey-and-Gray Insanity

POWER: Drain all passion and kinetic energy from the current turn.

LORE: An extremely middle-ground worldview positing that everyone's on the same morally dubious, boring level.

Protagonist-Centered Morality

POWSE: Any war crime you commit is automatically reclassified as a "quirky mistake."

LORE: You're the protagonist, therefore anyone not explicitly clapping for you must be an enemy.

RIGGING THE RING: Philosophical Headlocks

Pinning reality to the mat.

Chaos Is Evil

POWER: Destroy the current arena, removing all rules for one turn.

LORE: The establishment's propaganda that any deviation from their script is a force for ultimate villainy.

Order Is Not Good

POWER: Paralyze an opponent with insurmountable bureaucratic red tape.

LORE: Tradition and rules aren't here to protect you; they're here to make sure you stay in your cubicle.

Above Good and Evil

POWER: Ignore all moral-based attacks because you simply "do not care."

LORE: You aren't really concerned with good or evil. You just want everyone to know you're smarter than them.

Sliding Scale of Idealism vs. Cynicism

POWER: Flip the game's tone: positive effects become negative, and vice versa.

LORE: Optimism and pessimism locked in an eternal, agonizing grappling match.

Stay fluffy!

GW

Georg v. Westphalen

KayToBONGO!

THE DIRTY MOVES: Cheap Shots

When the ref looks away, bring out the folding chairs.

Kick the Dog

POWER: Generate instant, massive heat from the audience to establish yourself as the Heel.

LORE: A gratuitously cruel act used when the writer is too lazy to give you actual character development.

Shoot the Dog

POWER: Eliminate a sympathetic character to force the plot forward.

LORE: You're forced to do something horrible for the "greater good," but mostly for the drama.

Caper Rationalization

POWER: Steal an item from another player and successfully argue why it's fair.

LORE: You have a perfectly logical, highly detailed reason for committing blatant theft.

Buy Them Off

POWER: Cancel any incoming punishment by paying double its value in tokens.

LORE: Avoiding owning up to your misdeeds through the ultimate superpower: liquid capital.

THE DIRTY MOVES: Excessive Force

Escalation is the only language they speak.

Cold Equation

POWER: Sacrifice a low-tier friendly unit to survive a board-wipe.

LORE: Sacrificing one life to save others, usually while looking incredibly brooding and sad about it.

Disproportionate Retribution

POWER: Deal 10x damage in response to being poked.

LORE: Harsh, apocalyptic vengeance for the most petty, mundane slights imaginable.

What the FLUPP?!

Pay Evil Unto Evil

POWER: Use villain weapons without taking an alignment penalty.

LORE: Doing horrific, mean things is totally justified if the victim was a jerk first.

Dirty Coward

POWER: Sacrifice your tag-team partner to instantly escape the arena.

LORE: You'll leave everyone else to die to save your own butt, and you won't even feel bad about it.

KayToBONGO!

It's not a crime if you rebrand it.

POWER: Keep an opponent alive but completely remove their ability to play the game.

LORR: Letting your enemy live with a Fate Worse Than Death so you can keep your "Hero" rating.

POWER: Force an opponent's card to permanently fight for you.

LORE: Stripping away free will is perfectly acceptable as long as it's for a "good cause."

POWER: Automatically cancel any "Arrest" or "Banish" effect.

LORE: You cut the villain a break because they are too popular with the fanbase to write out of the story.

POWER: Ignore all puzzle mechanics and just destroy the target.

LORE: When moral dilemmas and negotiations get too complicated, just use the easy way out.

THE REFEREE'S PAYOUT: Karmic Receipts

The universe keeps score. (Badly.)

Karma Houdini

POWER: Evade all end-of-game consequences regardless of your alignment score.

LORE: You get away scot-free with everything, infuriating the audience and breaking the cosmic scales.

Karmic Death

POWER: Defeat an opponent by letting them trigger their own trap.

LORE: The universe finally remembers to do its job, and you die as a direct, ironic consequence of your wickedness.

Earn Your Happy Ending

POWER: Claim victory, but your character is permanently retired.

LORE: After enduring absolute hell, everything works out for you... assuming you survive the trauma.

No Good Deed Goes Unpunished

POWER: Take 2 damage every time you use a "Heal" or "Protect" action.

LORE: Doing good deeds actively backfires, proving the kayfabe is rigged against the pure.

KayToBICARGE!

KayToBOMGO!

THE REFEREE'S PAYOUT: Rigging the Scoreboard

Cash rules everything around the ring.

Screw the Rules, I Have Money!

POWER: Ignore any game rule by paying the bank.

LORE: Being rich lets you buy a private, luxury box outside of the morality spectrum.

Disproportionate Reward

POWER: Gain massive end-game points for a completely trivial action.

LORE: Being rewarded excessively for a minor act of kindness, throwing the entire economy out of balance.

Karmic Jackpot

POWER: Convert all stored 'Good Karma' directly into win conditions.

LORE: You did the bare minimum of good deeds, and the universe decides to pay out the jackpot.

Laser-Guided Karma

POWER: Instantly delete one specific opponent who has wronged you.

LORE: After 10 seasons of getting away with it, the writers finally remember you exist and drop the hammer.

